

Micro Technologies Ties Up With Knowledge Vector

Wednesday, August 23, 2006: Mumbai: Micro Technologies India Ltd has joined hands with US-based enterprise solutions company, Knowledge Vector. As per the tie-up, knowledge vector would customise the high-end security products of Micro Technologies to meet the growing demand of defence and security solutions in the US market.

This tie-up will leverage technologies from both companies to derive advantages of the global scale. The customised version of Micro IBB will feature Knowledge switches for the US security products market.

Knowledge Vector is a provider of complex event processing technology that creates real-time intelligence with broad-market application, whereas the security software products of Micro Technologies provide security solutions to various kinds of applications like combating any disaster through natural or through human activities.

The tie-up would pave way for the company's global foray with its innovative products and solutions that address a growing demand for security and life-support product globally.
